HOW THE TROOPS LIVE IN "CAMP"

Conveniences Are Many and Camps Are Full of Enjoyment For Men.

Many civilians would be surprised to know how the soldiers in camp along the Rio Grande pass their time. Take for example, the sixteenth infantry (and all the regiments are practically the same) with its modern camp, electric lights, sewerage, cinder roads and paths that are as hard and service-

Every company has a recreation room, with tables and rading material and some of the companies, and they are in the majority, have phonographs and pool tables and when the men are off duty they can go where they please and if they do not care to go to the city, they can go to the recreation room and play pool or read as the notion strikes them.

Do not confuse the word recreation room. This place is built of substantial lumber and it is not a tent as some would likely believe.

Men are encouraged

There is also a moving picture show four nights a week and a band concert free for the soldiers and their friends under the direction of the regimental chaplain, Maj. Hillman. Every Friday night there is either a vaudeville show

All the camps have post exchange and the soldier does not have to go to town if he does not care to. Lieut. Lee, exchange officer, has arrangements made with many of the first class men's houses of El Paso to transact business for the regiment, through the exchange, and the soldier does not have to go farther than his exchange if he does not want to.

Anyone who wants to see a modern store in operation in a camp may visit the 16th Infantry exchange. There was also a hat establishment and a first class three chair barber shop in connection with the exchange.
